JEFF BEZOS HAS BUILT A SUPER
SUCCESSFUL
BUSINESS
BASED ON 14 EX-TREMELY POW-
ERFUL AMAZON
LEADERSHIP PRINCIPLES.

BY PETER ECONOMY@BIZZWRITER

These 14 Amazon Leadership Principles Can Lead You and Your Business to Remarkable Success

What are the values that drive your work? Do they include a commitment to honesty? A desire to innovate?

What about the companies you are a part of? Do these businesses or organizations stick to a particular set of values and principles? Have these values been communicated, if established at all?

Having a strong set of values can pave the way towards success. Super successful Amazon has and operates by its own set of leadership principles—a set of principles referred to during company decision-making, problem-solving, simple brainstorming, and even hiring.

THEY NEVER SAY "THAT'S NOT MY JOB."

I have personally had good fortune to work with a number of executives within Amazon, and I can vouch for the fact that they live these principles every day of the week. These leaders set the bar high, and then they constantly raise it.

Whether you're interviewing for a job at Amazon—or crafting a list of values for your own business—check out the 14 leadership principles Amazon workers refer to on a daily basis:

1. Customer Obsession.

Leaders start with the customer and work backward. They work vigorously to earn and keep customer trust. Although leaders pay attention to competitors, they obsess over customers.

2. Ownership.

Leaders are owners. They think long term and don't sacrifice long-term value for short-term results. They act on behalf of the entire company, beyond just their own team. They never say "that's not my job."

3. Invent and Simplify.

Leaders expect and require innovation and invention from their teams and always find ways to simplify. They are externally aware, look for new ideas from everywhere, and are not limited by "not invented here." As we do new things, we accept that we may be misunderstood for long periods of time.

WE VALUE CALCULATED RISK TAKING.

4. Are Right, a Lot.

Leaders are right a lot. They have strong judgment and good instincts. They seek diverse perspectives and work to disconfirm their beliefs.

5. Learn and Be Curious.

Leaders are never done learning and always seek to improve themselves. They are curious about new possibilities and act to explore them.

6. Hire and Develop the Best.

Leaders raise the performance bar with every hire and promotion. They recognize exceptional talent, and willingly move them throughout the organization. Leaders develop leaders and take seriously their role in coaching others. We work on behalf of our people to invent mechanisms for development like Career Choice.

7. Insist on the Highest Standards.

Leaders have relentlessly high standards; many people may think these standards are unreasonably high. Leaders are continually raising the bar and drive their teams to deliver high-quality products, services, and processes. Leaders ensure that defects do not get sent down the line and that problems are fixed so they stay fixed.

LEADERS
FOCUS ON THE
KEY INPUTS
FOR THEIR
AND DELIVER THEM WITH
QUALITY AND
IN A TIMELY FASHION.

8. Think Big.

Thinking small is a self-fulfilling prophecy. Leaders create and communicate a bold direction that inspires results. They think differently and look around corners for ways to serve customers.

9. Bias for Action.

Speed matters in business. Many decisions and actions are reversible and do not need extensive study. We value calculated risk taking.

10. Frugality.

Accomplish more with less. Constraints breed resourcefulness, self-sufficiency, and invention. There are no extra points for growing headcount, budget size, or fixed expense.

11. Earn Trust.

Leaders listen attentively, speak candidly, and treat others respectfully. They are vocally self-critical, even when doing so is awkward or embarrassing. Leaders do not believe their or their team's body odor smells of perfume. They benchmark themselves and their teams against the best.

12. Dive Deep.

Leaders operate at all levels, stay connected to the details, audit frequently, and are skeptical when metrics and anecdote differ. No task is beneath them.

LEADERS ARE OBLIGATED TO RESPECTFULLY
CHALLENGE DE-CISIONS WHEN THEY DISAGREE,
EVEN WHEN DO-
ING SO IS UN-
COMFORTABLE
OR EXHAUST-ING.

13. Have Backbone; Disagree and Commit.

Leaders are obligated to respectfully challenge decisions when they disagree, even when doing so is uncomfortable or exhausting. Leaders have conviction and are tenacious. They do not compromise for the sake of social cohesion. Once a decision is determined, they commit wholly.

14. Deliver Results.

Leaders focus on the key inputs for their business and deliver them with the right quality and in a timely fashion. Despite setbacks, they rise to the occasion and never settle.

Top 10 Qualities of Highly Successful People

If you really want to bring success into your life, you should cultivate yourself just as you'd cultivate a garden for the best yield.

The attributes here are shared by successful people everywhere, but they don't happen by accident or luck. They originate in habits, built a day at a time.

Remember: If you live your life as most people do, you will get what most people get. If you settle, you will get a settled life. If you give yourself your best, every day, your best will give back to you.

Here are the traits that the highly successful cultivate. How many do you have?

1. Drive

You have the determination to work harder than most and make sure things get done. You pride yourself on seeing things getting completed and you take charge when necessary. You drive yourself with purpose and align yourself with excellence.

YOU CAN RELATE TO OTHERS, WHICH IN TURNS MAKES EVERYTHING
FURTHER AND DEEPEN IN IMPORTANCE.

2. Self-reliance

You can shoulder responsibilities and be accountable. You make hard decisions and stand by them. To think for yourself is to know yourself.

3. Willpower

You have the strength to see things through—you don't vacillate or procrastinate. When you want it, you make it happen. The world's greatest achievers are those who have stayed focused on their goals and been consistent in their efforts.

4. Patience

You are willing to be patient, and you understand that, in everything, there are failures and frustrations. To take them personally would be a detriment.

5. Integrity

This should not have to be said, but it's seriously one of the most important attributes you can cultivate. Honesty is the best policy for everything you do; integrity creates character and defines who you are.

6. Passion

If you want to succeed, if you want to live, it's not politeness but rather passion that will get you there. Life is 10 percent what you experience and 90 percent how you respond to it.

YOU TRUST
YOURSELF. IT'S AS SIMPLE AS THAT.

7. Connection

You can relate to others, which in turns makes everything reach further and deepen in importance.

8. Optimism

You know there is much to achieve and much good in this world, and you know what's worth fighting for. Optimism is a strategy for making a better future—unless you believe that the future can be better, you're unlikely to step up and take responsibility for making it so.

9. Self-confidence

You trust yourself. It's as simple as that. And when you have that unshakeable trust in yourself, you're already one step closer to success.

10. Communication

You work to communicate and pay attention to the communicators around you. Most important, you hear what isn't being said. When communication is present, trust and respect follow.

No one plans on being mediocre; mediocrity happens when you don't plan. If you want to succeed, learn the traits that will make you successful and plan on living them out every day.

Be humble and great. Courageous and determined. Faithful and fearless. That is who you are, and who you have always been.

IF YOU WANT TO BE AN ENTRE-
PRENEUR, YOU
NEED TO HAVE
PERSONALITY
AND THE RIGHT ATTITUDE.

10 Essential Characteristics of Highly Successful Entrepreneurs

Owning a business isn't for everyone. The stress and hard work that come with it makes many people unwilling to dive in.

It takes a special kind of person to be an entrepreneur - to come up with an idea and put that idea into action. But not all ideas work out. In fact, the Bureau of Labor Statistics finds that 50% of small businesses fail within the first four years. Not a big vote of confidence for quitting your job and becoming an entrepreneur.

But entrepreneurs don't see the risk: they see the reward. As an entrepreneur myself, I know how to put the time and effort in to make my dream a reality.

If you want to be an entrepreneur, you need to have the right personality and the right attitude. Here are 10 essential characteristics to be successful as an entrepreneur:

PERHAPS THE
MOST IMPORT-
ANT CHAR-ACTERISTIC
FOR ENTRE-PRENEURS,
PASSION IS ESSENTIAL TO ANY BUSINESS
OWNER OR WORKING PRO-
FESSIONAL'S
SUCCESS.

1. Creative

Entrepreneurship starts with an idea. To be successful, you need to always be thinking of new ideas and better ways of doing things.

In an interview in Martyn Lewis's book "Reflections on Success," Virgin Airlines founder Richard Branson said, "I've gone into business, not to make money, but because I think I can do it better than it's been done elsewhere. And, quite often, just out of personal frustration about the way it's been done by other people."

Entrepreneurs are not satisfied with the status quo. They think outside the box and look for opportunities to come up with new solutions.

2. Passionate

Perhaps the most important characteristic for entrepreneurs, passion is essential to any business owner or working professional's success. Without passion, there is no reason for your work and no drive to do it.

Entrepreneurs love what they do and are extremely dedicated to the businesses they create. To be successful, you must be confident in yourself and your business, and you must be proactive with what you do and how you do it.

ENTREPRE-
NEURS KNOW
HOW TO ADAPT TO UNFAMILIAR SITUATIONS.

3. Motivated

In an interview with The Computerworld Smithsonian Awards Program, the late Apple founder Steve Jobs said, “I’m convinced that about half of what separates the successful entrepreneurs from the non-successful ones is pure perseverance.”

Because of their passion for their ideas, entrepreneurs are willing to put in the long hours and hard work required to launch and run a successful new business. Are you self-motivated?

Entrepreneurs are their own boss, which means there’s no one telling them to do things. You must be in charge of your own time and how you spend it.

4. Optimistic

Do you see the glass half empty or half full? For entrepreneurs, it’s always half full. Entrepreneurs always look on the bright side and are constant dreamers. They look at how they can do things better and make the world a better place. They never dwell on the past or the negative. Instead, they focus on moving forward and moving up.

When they’re confronted with challenges, entrepreneurs don’t see them as problems; they see them as opportunities. Challenges fuel entrepreneurs and make them reach higher and do more.

ENTREPRE-NEURS ALSO KNOW HOW TO MAKE THE
MOST OF WHAT THEY HAVE.

5. Future-oriented

Because entrepreneurs are focused on moving forward, they are always looking toward the future. Entrepreneurs are very goal-oriented and know exactly what they want. They set their goals and everything they do is aimed at achieving those goals.

Having a strong vision helps propel you toward accomplishment. Consider setting a goal for yourself - a north star that can guide you on your path to success.

6. Persuasive

To be successful in business, you have to know business. If you're a people person and know how to get people to listen to you, you could be a successful entrepreneur.

Especially when first starting out, entrepreneurs need to gain buy-in from those around them on their big idea. If it's an out-of-the-box idea, which it usually is, many people will be skeptical before giving their support or investing any money. That's why entrepreneurs need to use their persuasiveness to sell themselves and their ideas.

7. Flexible

According to professional development coach Ruchira Agrawal in an article for Monster, "As an entrepreneur, you'll typically start out as a 'solopreneur,' meaning you will be on your own for a while.

THERE IS NO
ROOM FOR PRO-
CRASTINATION
IN BUSINESS.

You may not have the luxury of hiring a support staff initially. Therefore, you will end up wearing several different hats, including secretary, bookkeeper and so on.”

Entrepreneurs know how to adapt to unfamiliar situations. If their business requires that they learn how to build a website or send an invoice, they’ll do it. Whatever it takes, entrepreneurs are ready and willing. They always approach things with an open mind and are willing to change course if they need to.

8. Resourceful

In business, problems aren’t a matter of if, but when. Entrepreneurs do not shy away from challenges or conflicts. Instead, they face them head on and come up with a solution. They know how to solve problems effectively.

Entrepreneurs also know how to make the most of what they have. Time, money and effort are never used haphazardly. Everything has a plan and a purpose.

9. Adventurous

In an interview with Y Combinator president Sam Altman, Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg said, “In a world that’s changing so quickly, the biggest risk you can take is not taking any risk.”

THERE IS NO
ROOM FOR PRO-
CRASTINATION
IN BUSINESS.

Want a Successful Marriage? Spouses Should Do These 10 Things For Each Other Often

What's the secret to a happy and long-lasting marriage for busy professionals and entrepreneurs? No different than anybody else. It's to learn to develop the kind of genuine love that does not seek to gain, but only to give.

For starters, it doesn't say, "I want to date this woman because the market valuation for her business is 5 million!" Genuine, unconditional love has no fine print. It has no ulterior motives.

So what does that look like in real life if you're about to tie the knot? Or, even if you've been at it for 10, 15 years? You have to know each other at the core of your gender identity. Men and women have very different and specific needs.

LET HER BE PART OF YOUR TEAM.

10 Things Women Need In a Marriage

Do you know what the #1 need of a woman is? It is to know that she's significant, and that you (I'm looking at you, husbands) treasure her.

You're a wise man if you can speak into that every day because your spouse wants to know that she... is...valued. And you value your spouse ten different ways:

1. She needs to be number one. Your wife needs to feel that she is more important than your business or job, and especially more important than your mother, children, friends, sports, and hobbies.

2. She needs intimacy. When your wife is stressed out and overwhelmed from putting out fires all day while trying to meet that important deadline, she needs to know that you are willing to share an intimate moment of comfort without demanding explanations or giving lectures. In other words, don't fix her. Lend an ear, and let her process.

3. She needs you to be vulnerable. Open or unobstructed communication is hugely important to the female gender, and that you can be emotionally available for her.

4. She needs to be praised. Make it a habit to often acknowledge and praise her for her work accomplishments so she can feel like she's a valuable part of your life.

STOP THE INSULTS IN AN

MOTIVATE HIM
TO CHANGE.

5. Let her be part of your team. Your wife needs to feel free to help you and contribute to the things that matter to you without fearing retaliation and anger.

6. She needs you to protect and defend her. Not just from physically harm, but from the criticism of others. She wants to know that you are for her, and has her back.

7. Make her feel like her opinion counts. She needs to know that her opinion is so valuable about your work or business that you will discuss decisions with her, and act only after carefully evaluating her advice.

8. Share your life with her. She needs to connect with you in a special way, so create margin so she can share her life with you in every area – home, family, work, and outside interests. Don't shut her out.

9. Be a man of character and integrity. She needs you to be the kind of man her son can follow and her daughter would want to marry.

10. Hold her often. She needs physical affection, to be tenderly held, just to be near you, apart from times of sexual intimacy. (don't worry men, I got you covered on the sex department in the next section below)

YOUR MAN, NOT JUST THE PARTS

EMOTIONALLY.

10 Things Men Need In a Marriage

So what do men want? Aretha Franklin sang it best in 1967: R-E-S-P-E-C-T.

While this can be a slippery proposition for some women (“He doesn’t deserve my respect, he’s a narcissistic slob!”), most men want to be held in high esteem and be seen by their women as their heroes—even when they makes mistakes.

Men want and need their mates to believe in them, especially when they take a beating from putting in 70 hours of work to get that startup launched. And women hold the key because so much approval and affirmation comes from their wives.

While they are dedicated and hard-working husbands and fathers, they may have different emotional and sexual expectations, and at the end of the day—those men desire to be respected for who they are, not for what have you done for me lately?

Here are 10 ways that men need to be respected in a marriage:

1. Stop the insults in an attempt to motivate him to change.

Women may think their harsh criticisms will fix their husbands and make them better. Nope! What you are doing is actually causing rejections that will lead to anger, which will then lead to bitter resentment toward you.

EXPRESS
HIS LOVE
LANGUAGE.

2. Create the safe space for open and emotionally honest dialogue to happen. If a woman can risk still respecting her man in spite of his Neanderthal habits, he will eventually demonstrate with his heart that he can and is willing to change.

Respect is the gateway for such conversations to happen, and a wise wife will offer it frequently to build up her husband, and set the stage for such intimate encounters.

3. Express respect in his love language. It can be spoken through “words of affirmation” – one of Gary Chapman’s Five Love Languages. Nothing is as important for such a man to hear his woman assure him that he is awesome, competent, and heroic. So make your home a place of safety in his life, where those critical voices he hears in his business life are drowned out by the soothing voice of your affirmations.

4. Respect him by offering yourself for physical affection (yes, sex). When wives willingly and passionately make love to their men (I said passionately, not passively), and initiate the act occasionally, this speaks loudly that you respect his need for physical affection, served up his way.

5. Respect him by letting him be a man. If a woman allows her Joe to be Joe without mothering him, and lets him “be” who he was designed to be without the need to fix him, Joe will drop the remote stuck on ESPN, come out of his cave more often, hand you his heart, and engage you emotionally....without losing his masculinity.

6. Respect him by giving him space. Lets say you and your man get into a heated spat. Sometimes the tendency is for a woman to push for instant conflict resolution. Is that true? What's going on in your mature man's mind is totally the opposite. He's going, "I need some space now!" Give him the space he needs to go to his cave and process his thoughts. He might be new to this, so even allow for him to complain and express himself in a way he needs to be heard until he eventually comes around.

7. Support and encourage him because he's under pressure most of the time, but won't tell you. A man fighting to provide for his family needs constant affirmation, and that she believes in him and looks up to him. Wives must see themselves in the privileged role of offering their men what no other person can – full acceptance of their masculine truth.

A woman who reaches this level of respect for her man will have a man who'll love her forever.

8. Appreciate all parts of your man, not just the parts that connect to you emotionally. If you appreciate his muscles, athleticism, creative flair, how he takes care of the bills, mows your beautiful lawn with accurate precision, or fixes things around the house without you asking, tell him how much you appreciate it all, and often. What may happen next is he'll start to open up the relational parts that have been lacking.

BE ATTRACTIVE FOR HIM.

9. Be attractive for him. I'm not talking about how a woman looks in a two-piece, three kids later, although taking care of oneself physically is important to husbands. The attraction I speak of that a mature man desires goes beyond the physical and into the emotional. When he connects with her at her best, sparks fly. That means a woman's love of self, her passion for life, and how she carries herself will transcend his love for you. As you embody your attractiveness, he will reflect that same passion. A woman who wants a mature man will invest in living life to its fullest.

10. Respect him by growing as a whole person. What can be more attractive to man than a happy and joyful disposition in a woman? It's contagious, and it empowers men. To get to that happy place also means the road along the way took some work of healing and growth for you— like releasing shame, depression, anger, sadness, and fear along the way. But you've arrived, and you are now deserving of a mature, emotionally-healthy man so that both of you may have life, and have it abundantly.

7 Ways Successful People Spend Their Free Time

When you think about professional success, you think about the strategies and behaviors that people exemplify when at work. You think about what people do during the 9-5 working hours, and whether they extend those hours by coming in early or staying late to tackle projects. What they do when they get home, or on weekends, when they're away from the office and away from their computers, doesn't enter your mind. But here's the thing: it should.

How people spend their free time can actually have a big impact on their success in the professional world. Successful people tend to spend their free time in these seven ways (and more, of course), so read below and find out why:

1. They Exercise. Physical exercise is important for both physical and mental health. Taking a half hour after work or on a weekend can get your blood pumping, get your endorphins flowing, and revitalize your spirit. You'll build muscle, burn calories, and oxygenate your brain—giving you a release after a day of stress.

MANY NETWORKING
EVENTS EXIST
OUTSIDE THE REALM OF CORPORATE HOURS.

Exercising regularly also helps you remain disciplined, which can be valuable in a demanding work environment, and can reduce the long-term effects of stress as well—meaning regular exercisers tend to be less stressed about their jobs. You'll also look better and feel better, which gives you greater confidence.

2. They Read. Reading is a lifelong skill, and successful people never stop reading new books. Whether it's fiction or nonfiction, books help give you a greater understanding of the world around you.

They introduce you to new characters, new environments, new cultures, new philosophies, and new ideas, and might even help you build new skills (if you're reading nonfiction, at least).

Similarly, reading regularly helps to build your vocabulary and your semantic comprehension, giving you greater communication skills—and something to make small talk about during those particularly awkward business meetings.

3. They Take Classes. Education shouldn't stop at college, and shouldn't be restricted to institutions. The most successful people in the world are the ones who make a commitment to never stop learning. They're always incorporating new skills for their resumes and learning new aspects of the world around them. Instructional courses aren't particularly difficult to find, either, especially in the modern era.

INDING AND PURSUING A HOBBY, ON THE OTHER
HAND, HELPS
YOU RELIEVE STRESS, PUT YOUR JOB IN PERSPECTIVE,
AND BUILD SKILLS THAT COMPLEMENT
ONES YOU USE
AT WORK.

Many local colleges offer courses for free, and you can peruse local forums or gatherings to find impromptu group workshops. And don't underestimate the value of free online courses. If you have a free hour and an Internet connection, you can start learning a new skill.

4. They Volunteer. Volunteering, no matter where or how you do it, is beneficial for you and your community. Whether you're helping to clean up a highway, working in a soup kitchen, or providing mentorship to a group of young professionals, your time goes a long way toward improving the community around you. Professionals primed for success realize the importance of giving back to the community, and feel happier because of it. Volunteering is also a valuable networking experience, introducing you to other people who, one way or another, can help you drive your career forward.

5. They Network. Many networking events exist outside the realm of corporate hours. They include weekend breakfasts, cocktail hours, and after-hours gatherings for conversation and usually food and drinks. Successful people are willing to step outside their comfort zones in an effort to meet new people—regardless of any professional circumstances surrounding that effort.

THEY SPEND TIME WITH FRIENDS AND FAMILY.

They're not necessarily interested in meeting people to land new sales or find a new employee—instead, they simply like talking to people and meeting people, and success naturally follows them from there. The wider your network of contacts is, the more opportunities you'll have down the road.

6. They Have Hobbies. Focusing exclusively on work might seem like a fast track to success. With nothing else distracting you, you can funnel your full effort into your job and do in one week what would take most people two. But this approach has a nasty downside; it stresses you out, sets you up for burnout, and prevents you from developing skills in any other areas. Finding and pursuing a hobby, on the other hand, helps you relieve stress, put your job in perspective, and build skills that complement ones you use at work. It's a breath of fresh air that keeps you grounded, and if it's a social hobby, also offers networking opportunities.

7. They Spend Time With Friends and Family. I implied it in the last point, but I'll reiterate it more strongly here: your job isn't everything. Focusing too much on your career is self-sabotage, no matter how counterintuitive that might sound. If you want to be successful in life, you have to prioritize your personal relationships—your bond with your friends and family members. No matter how much you want to be successful and climb the corporate ladder quickly, you can't neglect your friends and family to do it.

IF YOU DON'T SPEND YOUR FREE TIME
LIKE THIS, IT
DOESN'T MEAN
YOU HAVE NO CHANCE
OF BEING SUCCESSFUL.

If you don't spend your free time like this, it doesn't mean you have no chance of being successful. However, picking up some of these strategies can improve your abilities, improve your mindset, and expand your network to levels that will increase your chances for success in the workplace. Start incorporating a few of them into your free time routines and you might just be surprised at the results.

ALL-TIME NBA
GREATS' WORK

This 1 Quote From Kobe Bryant Is All You Need to Know About His Success

On Monday, the Los Angeles Lakers retired two jerseys. Magic Johnson emceed the ceremony before a standing-room-only crowd at the Staples Center in the heart of downtown L.A. As the two jerseys, numbers 8 and 24, were hoisted to the rafters, the adoring Laker fans showered applause on the Laker greats who wore them. For this storied franchise with a long list of Hall of Famers, it was a fitting tribute.

There's only one twist to this fairy tale. Both numbers were worn by the same man.

During Kobe Bryant's 20-year career, he elevated a Laker franchise that had already seen the likes of Jabbar and Magic. His record wasn't without its smudges—he was arrested in 2004 in connection with a sexual assault complaint in Colorado, and while the charges were later dropped, his reputation was tarnished. Even so, he remains one of the very early success stories of players who came right out of high school to the NBA.

“THOSE TIME
WHEN YOU
GET UP EARLY...
THOSE TIMES
WHEN YOU
STAY UP LATE...
WHEN YOU'RE TOO TIRED...
YOU DON'T WANT TO PUSH YOURSELF,
BUT YOU DO IT
ANYWAY.”

“Those times when you get up early and you work hard,” Bryant said during the number-retirement ceremony. “Those times you stay up late and you work hard. Those times when you don’t feel like working. You’re too tired. You don’t want to push yourself, but you do it anyway. That is actually the dream.”

Bryant’s career has mirrored the path many entrepreneurs travel. By any measure, he has made it. But, don’t be fooled: Understanding his approach to the process is the lesson for any entrepreneur.

It’s about the work, not the result.

Bryant was an 18-time All-Star, 15-time member of the all-NBA team, won five championships, and finished his career third on the all-time scoring list. He won Olympic gold medals in 2008 and 2012 for Team USA. He holds the record as the NBA player with the longest tenure with one NBA franchise.

He is a future Hall-of-Famer.

Still, Bryant says “the dream” was the work it took to get there. Let’s remember his quote from the ceremony:

“Those time when you get up early... those times when you stay up late... when you’re too tired... you don’t want to push yourself, but you do it anyway.”

“That is actually the dream.”

AS A BUSINESS
PRO, YES,
OUTWORKING
YOUR PEERS
CAN BE A STRATEGY.

Bryant's work ethic is legendary (and that's an understatement).

Bryant would show up for 7 a.m. practices at 5 a.m. After high school practices, he'd make teammates stay to play games of one-on-one to 100.

Lakers head coach Byron Scott would find a sweaty 18-year-old rookie Bryant in a darkened gym, two hours before practice, doing individual shooting and dribbling drills.

He routinely outworked the NBA's best players. During the run-up to the 2008 Olympics, he did full predawn workouts before official practices started.

Chris Bosh and Dwayne Wade recounted such an episode to ESPN's Michael Wallace. "We're in Las Vegas and we all come down for team breakfast at the start of the whole training camp," Bosh said. "And Kobe comes in with ice on his knees. He's got sweat drenched through his workout gear. And I'm like, 'It's 8 o'clock in the morning. Where is he coming from?'"

Wade added, "Everybody else just woke up. We're all yawning, and he's already three hours and a full workout into his day."

It wasn't just on the court. Bryant claims to have taught himself to play Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata on the piano throughout the course of a season.

As a business pro, yes, outworking your peers can be a strategy.

WHILE BRYANT'S
NBA CAREER IS DONE, HIS LEGACY LIVES ON IN THE RAFTERS OF
THE STAPLES
CENTER.

The same concepts apply to business.

Now out of the league, Bryant appears to be shifting his attention to the business and entrepreneurial world. He has been known to text successful business friends at all hours of the night and cold call others who catch his interest via a tweet or article.

Bryant told Bloomberg Businessweek:

I'll just cold call people and pick their brain about stuff. Some of the questions that I ask will seem really, really simple and stupid, quite honestly, for them. But if I don't know, I don't know. You have to ask. I'll just do that. I'll just ask questions and I want to know more about how they build their businesses and how they run their companies and how they see the world.

While Bryant's NBA career is done, his legacy lives on in the rafters of the Staples Center. But it was clear during the retirement ceremony for those jerseys: He's interested in a different kind of legacy. One that speaks to the process to reach the accomplishment over the accomplishment itself.

The same can be said for building a great business or career. The accomplishments you achieve are an afterthought to the process it takes to get there. The work is the dream.

I'm guessing we haven't seen the last of Kobe Bryant.

CHILDREN WHO

THESE THINGS

Science Says the Most Successful Kids Have Parents Who Do These 5 Things

There's no denying that if you coast along and put forth minimal effort in raising your kids, there's a high likelihood they'll end up being mediocre (or even worse than mediocre, to be honest). Raising the highest achieving children will necessitate being intentional, disciplined and diligent. Here's what researchers say the parents of the most successful kids do differently.

They make sure Mom is happy

There's some credence to the phrase "Happy wife, happy life." That's according to researchers from the Marriage Foundation and the University of Lincoln who analyzed data from the Millennium Cohort study, a longitudinal survey conducted at the University of London, from which they gathered information regarding 13,000 U.K. couples with a child born in 2000 or 2001. They looked at how satisfied the couple was with their relationship when the child was nine months old.

“TRYING HARD IS IMPORTANT.”

They then fast-forwarded 14 years to determine how happy the couple was, whether they were even still together, if their teenagers were displaying mental health problems, and how close the parents reported being with their teenagers.

It turns out that all four outcomes were more linked with the mother's initial happiness, compared with the father's. For example, Mom's happiness was twice as important than Dad's when it came to whether or not they would stay together.

Mom's happiness was also twice as important when it came to predicting mental health issues in boys. As for girls, only their mother's happiness was found to be linked to their mental health as teens.

They role-model persistence

Imagine what your child's future would look like if he or she had the ability to persist in the face of challenges. Apparently, how you model your own persistence as a parent has a lot to do with it, say researchers at the University of Pennsylvania and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT). They looked at how well 520 four- and five-year-olds persisted by observing how much effort adults put into the same task. They also studied how the kids' persistence was affected by what adults said, such as “Trying hard is important.” Children persisted the most when adults themselves expended effort at a task and talked about the necessity of pushing through, even with things get hard.

EIGHTY-FIVE PERCENT
LESSONS HAVE IMPROVED THEIR CHILD'S PATIENCE,
RESILIENCY
AND ABILITY TO FINISH TASKS,
EVEN HARD
ONES.

They get engaged with their child's learning

That's according to researchers in England who conducted a study in which they surveyed and interviewed academic experts and reviewed recently published international studies regarding parental engagement and child academic achievement. They found that parents help young children the most by reading to them, listening to them read, helping them learn letters, numbers, songs and nursery rhymes, interacting positively with them and modeling parental literacy. When kids are older, they do better in school when their parents go on field trips, participate in the classroom, show an interest in school and monitor how kids are doing with homework and tests.

They get them to take music lessons

Researchers from the University of Georgia and the University of Alabama surveyed 2,323 parents of kids ages seven to 17 who were currently participating in some kind of private music lesson and found that the majority of parents see several ways music lessons help their kids manage their time and attention.

- Eighty-five percent feel that lessons have improved their child's patience, resiliency and ability to finish tasks, even hard ones.
- Sixty-eight percent believe that lessons have improved their child's ability to finish tasks on time as well their competence using a planner or calendar to track what's on their plate.

THE IMPORTANT
THING IS TO INFORM KIDS
ABOUT WHY
LIMITING SCREEN TIME
IS IMPORTANT,
AND THEN
LETTING THEM
CHOOSE THEIR
OWN LIMITS.

- Eighty-three percent think that lessons have helped them be more self-aware and receive feedback to improve performance.
- Sixty percent feel lessons have helped their child get better at self-monitoring and limiting screen time because they know it benefits them.
- Seventy-one percent of parents believe that because of taking lessons their kids are better at prioritization and self-monitoring screen time because when they do so they have more time to do activities which are important to them.

While the study was commissioned by Guitar Center, which is certainly biased on the subject, it fits that the daily practice involved in preparing to meet with a music instructor builds diligence and perseverance. It's also an appreciable amount of time kids aren't spending on their phones.

They teach them to be indistractable

That's according to Stanford psychology expert Nir Eyal and author of Indistractable: How to Control Your Attention and Choose Your Life. He says that in spite of the ubiquitous nature of digital distraction, becoming "indistractable" is the most important skill people will need in the future. Yet, it's also one that many parents don't teach their kids. The key, he insists, is that parents teach kids why limiting screen time is important and then give them the autonomy to set their own limits.

THE IMPORTANT
THING IS TO INFORM KIDS
ABOUT WHY
LIMITING
IS IMPORTANT,
AND THEN
LETTING THEM
CHOOSE THEIR OWN LIMITS.

In the case of his own daughter, when she was young he and his wife sat her down and explained that the time she spent using the iPad meant less time doing other fun things like spending time with friends or going to the community pool.

They then explained that the people who make the apps and videos she liked so much were designed so that she would want to spend a lot of time looking at a screen. Next, they asked her how much iPad time she thought she needed every day and instead of saying “all day,” she offered “two shows.”

The important thing is to inform kids about why limiting screen time is important, and then letting them choose their own limits. Now, as an older child, Eyal’s daughter asks Amazon’s Alexa to set timers to remind her when to get off her screen. “The important thing is that these are her rules, not ours, and that she’s in charge of enforcing them,” he writes. “Best of all, when her time is up, it’s not her dad who has to be the bad guy; it’s her device telling her she’s had enough.”

8 Wacky Entrepreneur Stories to Inspire Your Own Business Success

The business world might appear buttoned-down from the outside - but in reality, it's a lot more interesting than you might realize.

Many entrepreneurs are known for being colorful characters, both at work and in their personal lives. After all, following rules and staying inside the lines doesn't often make for business success!

From winning seed money in a poker game to attempting to clone dinosaurs, here are eight unexpected things that entrepreneurs have done.

1. John Paul DeJoria Bounced Back from Homelessness

You've probably heard of Paul Mitchell hair products and Patrón tequila, but did you know these brands have a common origin?

John Paul DeJoria co-founded both legendary companies, becoming a billionaire along the way. The path to success wasn't always easy for him, though. DeJoria spent time on the streets twice. The first time he was homeless, he was only 22 and had a two-year-old son to care for.

IN 2011, SCVNGR
- A SOCIAL APP
SIMILAR TO FOURSQUARE
- WAS A $100
MILLION COMPANY WITH A RATHER NON-TRADITIONAL CEO.

He persisted in his entrepreneurial vision, though, eventually co-founding John Paul Mitchell Systems with $700 in startup cash. Today, DeJoria is a philanthropist who supports a number of social causes. Among other things, he helps to provide resources to people dealing with homelessness.

2. David Daneshgar Won Startup Money by Playing Poker

What's the quickest way to come up with $30,000? If you're a card shark like David Daneshgar, the answer might be to sign up for a poker tournament. Daneshgar and two friends wanted to start an online marketplace connecting florists with customers, but they didn't have startup cash. So Daneshgar - who won the World Series of Poker in 2008 - spent $1000 to enter a poker tournament. The grand prize of $30,000 was, coincidentally, just the amount of money they needed. At the end of the tense final round, Daneshgar told his friends what they wanted to hear: "It's flower time." They launched their business, BloomNation, soon afterwards.

3. Seth Priebatsch Took Dedication to a New Level - While Barefoot

In 2011, SCVNGR - a social app similar to FourSquare - was a $100 million company with a rather non-traditional CEO. Founder Seth Priebatsch, the self-described "chief ninja" of the company, was 22 years old at the time, and he had a habit of eschewing footwear at the office.

IN 2011,

FOUNDER MARK
ZUCKERBERG

THAT HE KILLED HIMSELF.

He also sported a bright orange shirt every day and rarely went home from work, preferring to sleep in his office. Priebatsch transformed SCVNGR into a mobile payments platform called LevelUp in 2012, but he kept his title of Chief Ninja and his signature orange shirt.

4. Nicholas Berggruen Decided Not to Bother Buying a House

For most billionaire businesspeople, having more than one home is par for the course. But for years, Nicholas Berggruen avoided ever buying a house at all. He opted to live exclusively in hotels while traveling the world instead, which earned him the curious nickname of “the homeless billionaire.” Recently, though, Berggruen decided to put down some roots. He finally bought a $40 million house in 2017, perhaps wishing to give his two young children a stable place to grow up.

5. Mark Zuckerberg Killed His Own Food

In 2011, Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg undertook a personal challenge to only eat meat that he killed himself. He announced this challenge to the world with his now-infamous status update, “I just killed a pig and a goat,” on May 4, 2011. Zuckerberg soon clarified that he took on the challenge in an effort to learn about sustainable farming and to consume resources more responsibly. The change wasn’t permanent, though. After the year-long challenge was over, Zuckerberg went back to buying meat at the store.

6. Clive Palmer Tried to Clone a Dinosaur

What if Jurassic Park wasn't just a movie? Eccentric Australian businessman Clive Palmer wanted to make dinosaurs a reality through cloning, and he went so far as to discuss the idea with scientists. This happened in 2012, and since cloning techniques still haven't advanced enough to bring back extinct species, it doesn't look like Palmer's dreams will be coming to fruition anytime soon. However, his love for dinosaurs abides. In 2013, he opened a theme park called Palmersaurus that features over 160 enormous dinosaur replicas.

7. Mark Benioff Staged a Protest to Steal a Competitor's Spotlight

Mark Benioff, one of the founders of Salesforce, is notorious for coming up with over-the-top (and sometimes inflammatory) marketing gimmicks. Most famously, he once orchestrated a fake protest at a Siebel Systems conference, complete with picket signs, chanting, and even a fake TV crew. This drummed up a lot of attention for Salesforce at his rival's expense. On another occasion, Benioff arranged to rent an airport's entire taxi fleet right before another Siebel event was held nearby. He then had his employees pitch Salesforce on the way to the event, much to Siebel's displeasure.

8. Robert Klark Graham Tried to Create a Genius Sperm Bank

Robert K. Graham was an entrepreneur who invented shatter-proof lenses for eyeglasses. Today, though, he's probably better remembered for the controversial sperm bank he started.

Called the Repository for Germinal Choice, this sperm bank only accepted donations from people who were considered extraordinary in some way. Some were Nobel prize winners, some were geniuses, and some were gifted athletes. Graham's reason for starting the sperm bank? He wanted to create a better human gene pool - a mission that did not go over well with many people, who compared his ideas to Nazi eugenics programs. The sperm bank was closed in 1999, two years after Graham's death. It claimed to have produced 229 children during its 19 years of operation.

10 Things You Must Do to Be Successful in Business (and in Life)

There have been thousands of books written about what it takes to be successful in business, and a thousand more about achieving success in life as well. You can find another thousand articles on the web that discuss the topic, and a thousand more will be written tomorrow. With such a broad subject and with so many things that can play a role in making us happy, it can be difficult to boil it down to a short list of things that anyone can read and apply in their lives.

However, across those thousands of books and articles, among the countless legends and stories, you'll find some common themes woven throughout. You'll find principles about us as human beings that many of us think about but never try hard enough to achieve. You'll hear about ideals and decisions that we all wish we could aspire to but often fail to understand. Here are ten of those things you'll find among the tales of those who achieved success in business (and in life) - which ones do you currently have and which do you need to obtain?

WHILE THERE
ARE OBVIOUS
HURDLES TO
CHALLENGES
OVERCOMING
JUMPING INTO A BUSINESS
IN THE FIRST PLACE.

1. Be Fearless

Want to know why becoming successful in a business venture is considered such a daunting feat by society? While there are obvious hurdles to face, one of the biggest challenges is in overcoming the fear of jumping into a business in the first place. Most people dream all day about launching a successful business while watching the clock tick at their mundane day jobs. The reason they never quit the security of a paycheck is because they are too scared by the unknown that comes with starting a business. If you want to separate yourself from that crowd, you need to learn how to manage your own fears. Don't worry, you're not alone. When I quit my job to start my business, I was making double my salary outside my day job than I was inside working my eight hour job. I still had that huge fear of failure.

However, this is only the beginning of the road for those who want to be truly successful in business. Overcoming your fears and getting started is noble, but the true tests of a fearless entrepreneur will be constant, from initiating a conversation at a networking mixer, asking for the sale on a major deal, severing ties with a partner who is causing harm to the venture, and perhaps the most frightening of all situations - watching a business fail (it happened to Henry Ford twice before he designed his famous assembly line!) One who can fail miserably and not be scared to dust themselves off and try again and again until they are successful is truly fearless.

ONCE YOU
HARNESS YOUR FEARS AND
MAKE THE LEAP
TO STARTING A BUSINESS,
YOU'VE ALREADY
BECOMING A LEADER.

2. Understand Finance

Now, people all the time will talk about how a well known business brand started at one time in someone's basement or garage, so much that it's become a romantic notion of sorts that going from rags-to-riches is what really identifies a true entrepreneur. The reality of most successful businesses ventures couldn't be farther from the truth - if you want to make it, you're going to need money. However, that doesn't necessarily mean you need to have a lot of it when you're just getting started, but more importantly understanding how finance works and how to use your money to grow in the smartest way.

Robert Kiyosaki is most famous for teaching the world about the importance in how financial literacy plays such a crucial role in the lives of successful entrepreneurs. Those who live from paycheck to paycheck are also those that fill their lives with liabilities - car and house payments, credit cards, and other materialistic things that cost them money. Those who are financially literate, however, understand the importance of building assets - things that make them money instead. Once you start having a positive asset column, you can then learn how to make even more money through investing.

To be a successful entrepreneur you need to know how to take money and make it work for you.

THE SIMPLE
ADAGE
HANDS YOU
LEMONS, MAKE LEMONADE”
IS A GREAT EXAMPLE OF USING LEVERAGE TO MOVE YOUR BUSINESS
FORWARD.

3. Grow As A Leader

Once you harness your fears and make the leap to starting a business, you’ve already begun the journey of becoming a leader. As we’ll discuss shortly, your ultimate success will have a lot to do with how you help others find their own. Many of us hold successful entrepreneurs on a pedestal much like football fans hold a star quarterback or wide receiver in high regard. However, there’s always a team that these individuals lead that ultimately leads to their success. You must learn how to be a leader on some kind of level in order to motivate others to join you in your venture, believe in what you preach, or give you money for a product or service that you offer.

Just because you need to possess leadership qualities does not mean that everybody successful in business has to be the CEO, face of the company, or person “in charge”. When Google started to really grow, the company’s founders brought in a successful CEO in Eric Schmidt to come in and run their company - they were engineers, not CEOs. The ability to lead a team or lead the masses can sometimes come down to just having the right charisma and message to get the right people to do the things that need to be done in order for the entire thing to just work. A great soldier may be good at leading troops on the field, but not managing the entire war. An amazing product designer may also be a lousy salesperson.

TO HAVE A TRULY
HAPPY AND FULFILLING
IMPORTANT
TO KNOW
WHAT'S REALLY IMPORTANT
AROUND WHAT YOU CAN DO
EACH AND
EVERY DAY TO MAKE THAT WORLD A REALITY.

But a great leader will discover what they do best and where their weakness lies, and know who to put where in order to ensure that their company is one that achieves real success.

4. Use Your Leverage

One of the greatest challenges that will stand in the way of an entrepreneur from getting what they want is understanding what “to do” with the opportunities that fall in their laps along the way.

This is where leverage becomes such an important concept that people going into business need to understand, and it takes a certain kind of mind to think “outside the box” in situations to find the value in a new relationship or circumstance. The same people who are too scared to quit their day jobs are also the same people who do not know how to leverage the assets and relationships in their life. A successful entrepreneur, on the other hand, is constantly finding ways to create profits and new opportunities each and every day.

The simple adage “when life hands you lemons, make lemonade” is a great example of using leverage to move your business forward. Many people will make the lemonade and drink it themselves. A true entrepreneur will make lemonade and sell it to those without lemons, and use the profits to buy more lemons or move into another business.

WE LIVE IN A WORLD THAT IS CHANGING
EVERY DAY, AT A SPEED THAT ANY OF US CAN REALLY TRULY APPRECIATE.

While today a polarizing political figure, Donald Trump is a great example of an entrepreneur who time and time again used leverage to acquire crucial pieces of real estate or strike very lucrative business deals. Love him or hate him, his book The Art of The Deal is a great resource on how leverage can make someone mega successful.

5. Acquire Partners

We talked earlier about how becoming a leader is one of the most important qualities one needs to “move the chains” in the game of business. In order to achieve greatness as a leader, one must then have a team of individuals who believe in the mission in order to move forward. That’s where assembling a great team of partners plays such an important role in any profitable business. Many start out alone and the wearer of many hats, but a business can only scale so far if there is only one source of energy, of inspiration, and of the actual sweat equity it takes to keep the lights on.

As we will see in understanding the meaning of success both in business and in life, a true “business owner” is one who does not need to be a part of the day-to-day operations in order for the business to run and stay profitable. The classic book “The E-Myth” is a great story of how many try (and fail) at running a business all by themselves. Instead, you need to take those leadership skills and motivate others to take their own specific skillsets and apply them together as a team for the greater good of the company.

OUR NIGHTS
TURN INTO A TIME WHERE WE SOMETIMES
BURN THE
CANDLES AT BOTH ENDS,
TURNING THE STRESS OF
THE DAY INTO AN EXCUSE TO EASE THE PAIN
WITH ALCOHOL AND DRUGS.

This doesn't just include employees, but also includes knowing who to shake hands with, how to create strategic partnerships, and how to use that leverage we previously discussed to convince others to have an interest in your venture. And once you reach a certain level of success, it will be an even greater feeling when you get to share it with all who helped make it possible.

6. Having the Right Attitude

So far we've discussed some of the most important concepts you need to understand in order to achieve success in business - but how do you exactly justify what is true success? Is it money, or sales, or the influence your actions have over the environment around you? Ultimately real success in business only matters if it also equates to success in life, and that all starts with having the right attitude towards it. Nobody cares about those who are rich but hate the world they live in. Everyone knows the story of Ebenezer Scrooge, the jaded old man that had all the money in the world but did nothing but create misery for others.

To have a truly happy and fulfilling life, it's important to know what's really important and to develop values around what you can do each and every day to make that world a reality. Sure, many who start a business venture want to achieve a certain level of financial independence. But what does one do with those riches once they finally have them?

HAS THE
GREATEST OF CHILDHOODS,
AND NO ONE IS
EXPECTED TO SHARE WEALTH
WITH THEIR SIBLINGS JUST BECAUSE OF BLOOD.

Those with the attitude that having money means they can buy more “things” to surround themselves with in order to feel superior to others will never be successful in their life.

The entrepreneurs who focus on how they can create wealth that can help others and solve problems have the right attitude needed to obtain true happiness and be seen in a positive light by their peers and partners, and are the true embodiment of the word “success”.

7. Showing Gratitude

We live in a world that is changing each and every day, at a speed that any of us can really truly appreciate. Technology over the last 30-50 years has altered the way we communicate not only with our neighbor and loved ones but our business contacts around the world. The generations that have grown up with this technology often take it for granted, never once stopping to “smell the roses” and to realize that they live in an amazing time in history and that much of what they have in their lives - everything from the electricity powering their lights, the cars that help them get to their next meeting, to their smartphones in their pockets are all things they should very much be thankful for.

Those who are happy in both business and if life are those who are grateful for the world they live in.

TOO MANY OF
US GET CAUGHT UP IN THE
GAME OF LIFE
THAT WE NEVER THINK ABOUT
THE DAMAGE
WE ALL DO TO
OUR BODIES
ALONG THE WAY.

These are the people who make sure to thank the barista for their coffee in the mornings, who open the door for others, who actually listen to those who they have conversations with. Successful entrepreneurs should never forget all the people, places and things that have played a role in their lives that helped them get from their humble beginnings to where they are today. The next time you're flying on a plane, remember the comedian Louis CK's amazing observation that you're "sitting in a chair in the sky", and be grateful for all the wonderful things we get to experience every day.

8. Staying Healthy

Your money and success isn't going to do you any good if you're not around to use it - so why would you live your life so dangerously that you would sacrifice your health? What good is all the passion you have for your business dreams if you're not going to be around to see them come true?

Too many of us get caught up in the game of life that we never think about the damage we all do to our bodies along the way. As entrepreneurs our days are so full of work and juggling projects that are lunch breaks become mere small breaks in the day where we shove fast food down our throats to get rid of our hunger. I personally inhale my food.

KEEP THE RIGHT FRIENDS

Our nights turn into a time where we sometimes burn the candles at both ends, turning the stress of the day into an excuse to ease the pain with alcohol and drugs. While we worship the celebrities who died before their time, is that how we define success in life? Our obsession with money and material things makes us greedy and insecure of who we are and how others perceive us. Without our health, we can never truly achieve success. A leader needs to be strong, and we're not just talking about a lean body or muscles here - your mind has to be healthy in order to persevere through the day and not only achieve the success you're looking for, but to be able to enjoy it as well.

9. Keeping the Right Friends

We've discussed the importance of not going it alone along your path to building your business, and this same ideology applies to your personal success and happiness. What's the point of doing anything if you don't have special people in your life to share it with. No one wants to be the Bruce Wayne of their city, the quack who owns the huge dining room table with no one to dine with.

People are social by nature, and it's important to have a life outside of those you work with. Your friends are people to share your experiences with, who will be there to high-five you with every victory and also pick you up after every failure. Make sure they are also the ones who have the same attitude, give back gratitude, and remain a positive force in your life.

HAS THE
GREATEST OF CHILDHOODS,
AND NO ONE IS EXPECTED TO SHARE WEALTH
WITH THEIR SIBLINGS JUST BECAUSE OF BLOOD.

Those who feed off of negative energy are the ones you can bring the whole house crashing down around you.

10. The Importance of Family

We've discussed in detail why we become entrepreneurs in the first place, and the importance of deciding what goals we're trying to achieve. Most will begin the journey with dollar signs in their eyes, or seeking some level of power. Many times these things are personal and selfish, but one who is seeking true success in their lives will be doing so not just to share with their friends, but more importantly their families.

Not everyone has the greatest of childhoods, and no one is expected to share wealth with their siblings just because of blood. Not every entrepreneur has a soulmate, not will we all have children. It is important, however, to think about success beyond just the material or power one might ultimately yield. Real success lies in having a positive influence on those who you call family and those who will eventually remember, and hopefully continue, the legacy you leave behind.

33 Daily Habits Highly Successful People Have (and the Rest of Us Probably Don't)

Ever wonder why getting ahead can sometimes seem like such a struggle? The truth is: If you want to be highly successful, you need to be highly disciplined. I've polled countless executives and entrepreneurs about the things they're doing every day which help them succeed, and typically they credit simple daily routines which have been proven over time to give them an edge. Check out these quotes from 33 high-achieving individuals who share the habits which help them get ahead in business and life.

1. Read about your industry and beyond.

"I spend an hour, usually after dinner, reading about my industry, related industries, current events and pop culture. I start with daily curation emails like Jason Hirschhorn's REDEF series and then branch out. I bookmark and tag (first with Delicious, now with Evernote) posts that I like and might refer to later. When possible, I share these posts, along with a brief summary of my rationale for sharing, with my team or friends.

TREMENDOUS POWER AND OP-PORTUNITY IN
UNDERSTAND-ING HOW SEEM-INGLY UNRELAT-
ED TRENDS AND EVENTS WILL GO ON TO AF-
FECT THE WORK
YOU’RE DOING.”

If nothing else, this process helps me remember the salient parts of the post and gives me time to explore how they fit into my larger view of things. This is my version of something Alvin Toffler wrote about that likened our world view to a filing cabinet in our brains; whenever new information gets presented to us, we catalogue and file it and then it goes on to inform our worldview in some small way.

There’s tremendous power and opportunity in understanding how seemingly unrelated trends and events will go on to affect the work you’re doing.”

–P.J. Worsfold, head of product for FTSY (“footsy”), an artificial intelligence platform for matching people to shoes that fit

2. Keep a daily journal, but do it the right way.

“Most people use their journal to record events or to vent. But there’s so much more you can do with your journal and get immediate results in your life. Use your journal to write what you want your life to be. For years I’ve kept a journal to chronicle my life, plan for my dreams and strategize my goals. It is one of the important success habits that I do daily. Journaling empowers me to take my ideas and turn them into reality. What’s written is real. Once the words and images hit the paper, you have now crystallized a thought or idea. You can use the power of pen and paper to strategize and create anything you want. Journaling is one of the best methods of self-care therapy.

ENTREPRE-
NEURSHIP
REQUIRES
JUST MENTAL
FITNESS, IT RE-QUIRES PHYSI-CAL FITNESS AS WELL.

When you’re journaling consistently, you tend to ask questions about life, your direction and your business.”

–Dr. Stacia Pierce, author, life coach and founder of Lifecoach2women.com

3. Work out for a strong body, which holds up a strong mind.

“Successful entrepreneurship requires more than just mental fitness, it requires physical fitness as well. I have a daily workout regime that started in 2013 and has grown and evolved in step with our business. It started with CrossFit (high intensity interval type training) and has expanded from there. Clearing your mind and challenging yourself physically with a tough workout every day prepares you for the daily challenges of business. A strong body holds up a strong mind.”

–James Parrelly, managing partner of Paw Pods, eco-friendly pet caskets and urns, made from 100 percent biodegradable materials

4. Remove fear.

“I find when working with others, when we seem to reach a barrier to getting something done, the barrier is really about their fear of failure, fear of being blamed, fear of accountability, etc. This fear is rooted in their prior experiences with another boss, another colleague, or even a family member.

'NEVER GIVE UP!'

What I've learned is that if I tell them 'I'm in this with you, and if this heads south I'll accept as much or more responsibility for that than anybody,' we can get beyond that fear and become extremely productive."

—Stephanie Smith, microbiologist and cofounder of Cyantific Skin Care, which uses a natural and sustainable source of blue-green algae

5. Unplug without a device.

"Time away from the digital world is critical for my sanity, productivity and general wellness. Late night walks along the ocean without my phone provides a tranquil way to get exercise, digest the day, plan the next day and enjoy nature."

—Troy Anderson, cofounder of Sound Oasis, maker of sound therapy systems and electronic sleep masks which help people relax and sleep

6. Check your pride at the door.

"Great leaders understand that they are not the best at everything, but rather realizing their greatest asset is deciphering valuable information and how to action it quickly. Business owners have to be able to make tough decisions, but they need good reliable facts. Leaders who listen to their teams come out ahead and complete a better execution vs. leaders who only believe their way is always the right way.

–Kim Landi, founder of fashion and accessory brand

7. Never give up.

“My daughter would say my favorite saying is ‘Never give up!’ It sounds trivial, but there are so many times that if I accepted ‘No,’ I would not have moved along the pendulum. It’s a delicate dance of fortitude, polite aggression and compartmentalized fear. Sometimes you just have to hit at it from a different angle. I often conceptualize chipping away at the wall. Different angles, different tools and a little muscle. Rarely you get the answer you want out of the gate and often times through the process you find you need to adjust your approach, but the end goal always the same.”

–Jodi Scott, cofounder of Green Goo, formulas created using homeopathic herbal wisdom with natural ingredients to produce food for skin

8. Surround yourself with positive people.

“Social media has become a cesspool for the haters and trolls. Don’t let negative people hold you back. Understand that negativity generally comes from unhappy people and those who envy you. Happy successful people don’t tear others down. Surround yourself with ambitious, positive people. It’s too easy to focus on the negative and there’s just no upside to that.”

–Lisa Steele, author of Gardening with Chickens and Let’s Hatch

9. Listen and learn.

“Listen to your peers, employees and customers. You will always learn something from listening. I also find that it could facilitate relationships just by listening, and really let people feel that you care. It helps ease any tensions, even if it doesn’t immediately solve a problem, it could relieve any negative feelings just by letting people express themselves whether it be an unhappy customer, a stressed employee or colleague.”

–Kelvin Ho, cofounder of Pixie Mood, cruelty-free and vegan friendly accessories

10. Put in extra effort to stay organized.

“Making lists and setting daily goals helps us stay focused each day. There are so many fires to put out each day when you own your own business and working to stay organized and task oriented helps us stay on track and meet our goals. We also have planning meetings to map out our vision and goals for the next six and 12 months. This helps us focus on the big picture of growing a new business and measure our success and failures over the year.”

–Melissa Blue, cofounder of gluten free Meli’s Monster Cookies

OPPORTUNITIES WHICH

YOUR GOALS.

11. Pay attention to details.

“Refuse to cut any corners when it comes to ingredients or any aspect of the manufacturing process. While many have told me that my attention to detail is counterproductive, I feel that it has been very helpful with growing sales and ultimately earning customer confidence. Basically, I have depended upon my inner voice regardless of trends and well-intentioned advice that did not feel right to me. Go with your gut and don't deviate from your brand's mission.”

—Caralyn Vessal, president of Sufficient C LLC, an immune and digestive supportive drink mix

12. Keep some balance in your life.

“If you let your work consume you, it will. Pushing away from the laptop and cell phone for a break each day is critical. It's not always easy when you're chasing a deadline. Small distractions, however, can have an incredibly refreshing effect. Inject a little daily balance into your life—dinner with the family, an hour of exercise, going to see my child participate in an extracurricular activities or 30 minutes with a book or newspaper.”

—Michael Staffaroni, principal of UWEZO, a shoe brand that donates a percentage of its profits to generate scholarship funds for Empower African Children

PICK THREE THINGS TO DO
EACH DAY.

13. Write down your gratitude.

“First thing when I wake up, I write down three things I have to be grateful for, three things that would make that day great, and one daily affirmation. Right before I go to sleep, I write down three amazing things that happened that day and answer the question:

‘How could I have made today better?’ The daily practice of writing down what I have to be grateful for, and reflecting upon who I want to become, helps me rewire my brain and improve my happiness.”

–Laura Hertz, CEO of Gifts for Good, an e-commerce site that sells premium gifts for professionals that support charitable causes in 65 countries around the globe

14. Deprioritize opportunities which don't fit with your goals.

“After SmartGurlz aired on Shark Tank, my inbox became inundated with all kinds of opportunities. I have written my two major goals for the company on a Post-it note that is stuck to my monitor. If a request comes in that does not support those, I force myself to down-prioritise them or even say ‘no.’ Keep your focus and move on to more productive tasks. Learn from the experience that you cannot do it all. Once the butter is spread too thin, it is difficult to go back.”

–Sharmi Albrechtsen, CEO of SmartGurlz, a line of coding robots for girls

PROTECT YOUR SUNDAY NIGHTS.

15. Adapt to what the present holds.

“Here’s a quote that I repeat often to myself from The Art of War by Sun Tzu: ‘In the midst of chaos, there is also opportunity.’ It keeps me focused, knowing that even in moments when it all looks and feels like chaos, I am moving forward, I am looking for solutions, that may open new doors with endless possibilities. It reminds me to be flexible and adapt to what the present holds.”

–Gabriela Mekler, cofounder of mumi, a line of packing cubes and bags

16. Pick three things to do each day.

“Running a business can be quite overwhelming, with the work truly never ending. When you have a lot to do, my philosophy is to just pick 3 things to do each day. Do those three things first in the morning, and then wherever the rest of your day takes you, you know at least you’re progressing and have accomplished what you needed to.”

–Irene Patsalides, founder and CEO of Mirenesse Cosmetics Australia, maker of a 24-hour supreme mascara which sells one unit every three minutes globally

17. Start the day with a small, meaningful win.

“I start almost every day by talking to one of our customers. On Sunday night I spend about 30 minutes lining up informal calls for the week, and use my 20-minute drive to work to have those conversations. Jumping on the phone and hearing first hand what's working for them, their frustrations, and just how hard they're hustling gives me motivation to help them be as successful as possible. I try to carry their passion through the rest of my day. When the day starts with a small win, the momentum continues."

—David Rusenko, founder and CEO of Weebly, a platform that allows anyone to start and grow an online business with curated website template, powerful ecommerce and integrated marketing

18. Use Sundays to plan out your week.

"Between today's hyperactive communication landscape and the nonstop news cycle, it can be hard to stay focused, which is why I plan my week out before it starts. Every Sunday I spend time on Evernote walking through a regimented process of what I want to accomplish in the coming week, making sure it aligns with monthly, quarterly, and annual goals. Sure, fire drills come up and to-do lists change, but this approach to planning keeps me focused across different functions so that I can be as strategic as possible in my day-to-day."

—Maria Molland Selby, CEO of THINX Inc., the creators of THINX and Icon, underwear brands that empower humans and break taboos around female health

THINK LIKE A CUSTOMER.

19. Protect your Sunday nights.

“I have a post-it up in my kitchen that says, ‘Sunday is not a workday, so back off anticipatory brain!’ I have to consciously force myself to protect the empty space and recovery time. Having a small visual reminder gives my subconscious permission to wait until Monday morning to start working again. This is about recovery and time with family but it’s also about creating blank space in your head so new ideas can pop up.”

–Valarie Hamm Carlson, VP of Brand at Simple, a technology company which has blended budgeting and banking into a single app

20. Make a list of goals for improvement.

“I keep a running list of goals for improvement in the back of my daily notebook. It makes me more conscious of where I can do better. Before major meetings and presentations, I run through the list to make sure I’ve internalized relevant points, and afterwards I’ll run through any feedback with my co-founder or, if available, watch a recording of the presentation to add new goals to the list.”

–Viveka Hulyalkar, cofounder and CEO of Beam, a social impact app to turn everyday retail experiences into opportunities for social good

LET MUSIC
INFLUENCE
YOUR MOOD.

21. Walk while talking on the phone.

“Walking around the neighborhood while I’m on even the most important phone calls is key to energizing me and being a creative problem solver in the moment. I’m sure there’s some physiological science behind it (hence walking desks), but walking outside and talking is key to keeping me sane during the day. It also helps being in El Segundo and having plenty of parks and neighborhoods to stroll through.”

–Nick Alt, founder and CEO of VNYL, a premium music discovery service

22. Accept that one amazing thing will happen every day.

“When I wake up in the morning, I remind myself that no matter how impossible things seem, there’s going to be at least one really awesome and unexpected thing that’s going to happen that day. This really helps me get going, and 99 percent of the time, it turns out to be true.”

–Ilya Rosenberg, cofounder and CEO of Sensel, next generation touch technology allowing limitless open-source creative expression for makers and creators

23. Start your day with meditation.

“I’ve been meditating for a few years now, first thing after waking up each morning. It’s made a huge difference to me and to the people around me. Focusing on your breathing, just for 10 to 15 minutes in the morning gets you into a mindset where you're better able to step back from the thoughts and emotions that might cloud your thinking. Through mindfulness, you are able to approach situations with much more clarity to better focus on what's really important and prioritize your time accordingly, both professionally and personally."

–Johannes Quodt, cofounder and co-CEO of Koio, a luxury leather shoe brand

24. Walk in the park.

"To achieve better mental clarity, I try to go for a 30-minute walk in the park near my house every day. I find that taking that period to be outside by myself allows me to quiet my mind, organize my thoughts and find ways to approach different situations more objectively. I'm able to visualize the bigger picture associated with the big decisions I need to make professionally and personally, and ultimately, I'm better able to determine the correct course of action."

–Ethan Song, cofounder and CEO of Frank And Oak, a menswear and womenswear brand

25. Think like a customer.

"I try to approach our daily brainstorming sessions from the perspectives of our customers. I encourage my team to join me in coming to these meetings with a list of recent customer reviews and feedback to help us keep our customers top of mind as we develop new collections and work to constantly improve the shopping experience. This helps our entire team stay laser-focused and removes our egos from the mix.”

–Julia Olson, cofounder and CEO of Treehut, a customizable wooden watch brand

26. Invert the traditional working hierarchy.

“Every day as I interact with the team that reports to me, I actively and continually invert the traditional organizational structure. Instead of asking what they can do for me, I instead ask what I can do for them. As CEO, I view my role as making my general managers successful, not the other way around. I try to remove obstacles, reduce friction, give them better tools and impart guidance. Anything that frees them up to deliver bigger and better results, which in turn, helps create a better company.

I have for a long time believed that the ego is the number one destroyer of companies, and I have seen many examples of this in action. So, long ago, I decided to check my ego in at the proverbial front door and instead approach my leadership role as one of making divisional leaders as successful as possible. And that has seemed to have made a material difference.”

–Nick Earl, CEO at Glu Mobile, a developer of free-to-play mobile gaming

CREATE A SENSE OF CALM.

27. Let music influence your mood.

“When I’m in the car to and from work each day, I blare my music and make sure to sing along with whoever I’m listening to. Great way to gear up for the day or wind down after a particularly long one. Only downside is that it gets a bit awkward at a red light when you catch the next car staring at you while you’re belting out to Ed Sheeran.”

–Aaron Zarraga, cofounder and CTO of Sensel, next generation touch technology allowing limitless open-source creative expression for makers and creators

28. Create a sense of calm.

“Creating a sense of calm each day helps me to set goals, prioritize and reflect. Whether this means waking up early for a yoga class or practicing breathing and meditation on my morning commute, I have found that even five minutes can make a difference. This habit has allowed me to be more engaged, thoughtful and ultimately make better decisions in both my work and personal life.”

–Lynnette Bruno, VP of communications, Zillow Group and PR and Research at Trulia, a mobile and online real estate resource

GIVE YOURSELF TIME TO RELAX.

29. Make time for music.

“I listen to music every day. Not all day, just two songs minimum—one familiar and one random. One of the first things I do when I get out of bed in the morning is play one song I know will have a positive effect on me. This gets me going and puts me in the right mindset for the day. Then I’ll play at least one random song on my commute. Sometimes I get one I love or haven’t heard for years, sometimes I get neither. The variable reward not only keeps me coming back, but is exciting. For me, music has noticeable and powerful effects on my brain. It changes my mood, motivates me, and boosts my concentration.”

—Jason Finkelstein, CRO of Traitify, a company that applies personality science to help businesses attract, hire and keep the best people

30. Give yourself time to relax.

“Take an hour at the end of every day to decompress and unwind. Not only will you get to relieve the day’s stress, but you’ll give yourself the chance to really absorb everything you learned during the day and evaluate your next steps. Entrepreneurs - myself included - tend to be workaholics, but it’s important to take a break from the grind and let yourself breathe. Your business can only be in good shape if you are, too.

—Mark Johnson, CEO of Descartes Labs, a data refinery company

31. Tell the future you what to do.

“Increase productivity by allowing yourself to focus on the task at hand. An effective way to do this is by splitting your time into two categories: 1) telling yourself what to do, and 2) doing what you tell yourself to do. I use my calendar, email, and a to-do list on the wall to tell future me what to work on. Before the end of every day, I make sure it’s updated so that when I get to my office in the morning I know exactly what I need to do.”

–Matt Schlicht, cofounder and CEO of Octane AI, a technology company that makes social concierge bots for ecommerce businesses including L’Oreal, GoPro, Royal Caribbean, and Warner Music Group

32. Get inspired by reading something inspiring.

“It’s easy to sometimes get trapped in monotonous work or life patterns which can affect your mood and overall performance. When that happens, read something uplifting. If I’m dragging or feeling uninspired, I try to reset my attitude by reading a book that I find inspiring to give me a boost or just break the cycle of scheduled sameness.”

MOVE YOUR BODY.

33. Move your body.

“Literally move your body, whether it’s taking time to work out or a quick walk around the block after lunch. I’m more bookish than athletic, but as I’ve had to learn to manage myself along with my business, I’ve found that even a little bit of exercise gives me extra energy and a more positive outlook.

Plus, there’s something about a simple walk that gives your brain time to sort through and resolve problems.”

HERE ARE SOME SCI-ENCE-BACKED
PARENTING
STRATEGIES
TO HELP YOU
RAISE HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL
KIDS.

BY DAVID DODGE@DAVIDDDODGE

Science Says These 10 Things Will Help You Raise Extremely Smart and Successful Kids

What parent doesn't want their child to do well in school, stay out of trouble, and grow up to be a highly successful adult? But as I've found over the years raising my own daughter, that's far easier said than done.

The truth is, there is no set path to guaranteed parenting success (believe me, I've tried finding one). What I did find are a number of important studies that provide some guidelines that can greatly improve your odds.

Here are ten things you should do to raise smart, well-rounded kids.

JULIE LYTHCOTT-HAIMS ARGUES THAT ALLOWING KIDS TO MAKE MISTAKES AND DEVELOP RESILIENCE AND RESOURCEFULNESS IS CRITICAL IN SETTING THEM UP FOR SUCCESS.

1. Do teach social skills.

A 20-year study by researchers at Pennsylvania State and Duke University shows a positive correlation between children's social skills in kindergarten and their success in early adulthood.

Teaching your kids how to resolve issues with friends, share their belongings, listen without interrupting, and help others in the home is a great place to start.

2. Don't overprotect.

In today's age of helicopter parenting, many parents (including myself) have difficulty allowing our kids to solve problems, but rather rush to fix challenges for them.

Drawing on a Harvard University study, Julie Lythcott-Haims argues that allowing kids to make mistakes and develop resilience and resourcefulness is critical in setting them up for success.

Newsflash: This isn't easy. We all need to walk a fine line between protecting our children and letting them tackle problems in order to learn from them.

3. Do get your kids involved in academics early (then encourage independence when they are older.

Research shows that reading to your children and teaching them math early can greatly impact achievement in later years. However, it is best to start weaning kids off homework help later in elementary school, as helping your child with homework can actually stunt their development.

Parents should always communicate interest in their children's schooling, but encourage them to take charge of their work independently.

4. Don't let them languish in front of a screen.

Too much screen time has been linked to childhood obesity, irregular sleep patterns, and behavioral issues. In addition, a 2017 study by Greg L. West at the University of Montreal revealed that playing "shooter" games can damage the brain, causing it to lose cells.

So what can we do about the ever-so-helpful digital babysitter that so many of us rely on?

According to the American Academy of Pediatrics, entertainment "screen time" should be limited to two hours a day.

Another helpful idea: encourage your children to become content creators rather than passive consumers. Encourage them to learn computer programming, 3D modeling, or digital music production and turn screen time into a productive endeavor.

5. Do set high expectations.

Harnessing data from a national survey, a UCLA team discovered that the expectations parents hold for their kids have a huge effect on achievement.

CHILDREN IN

FAMILIES

GET ALONG,
ACCORDING TO A UNIVERSITY
OF ILLINOIS
STUDY REVIEW.

The study found that, by the time they were four, almost all the children in the highest performing study group had parents who expected them to attain a college degree.

6. Don't spend too much time praising innate qualities such as intelligence or looks.

"Wow, you got an A without even studying? You are so smart!"

A Stanford University study shows that praising children with statements like the above and focusing on their intelligence, can actually lead to underperformance.

As an alternative parenting strategy, parents are encouraged to offer praise that focuses on the effort kids expend to overcome problems and challenges by demonstrating grit, persistence, and determination.

7. Do assign chores.

There is a significant body of evidence that shows that chores are beneficial for childhood development. Yet, in a Braun Research poll, just 28 percent of parents said they regularly assign chores to their kids.

A University of Minnesota analysis of data found that the best predictor of success in young adulthood was whether children had performed chores as young as three or four.

DO STRIVE FOR A PEACEFUL, LOVING HOME

8. Don't tune out.

According to a survey by Common Sense Media, 28 percent of teens said their parents were addicted to their mobile devices. Another recent study by AVG discovered that 32 percent of children surveyed felt unimportant when their parents were distracted by their phones.

As the first generation of parents with 24/7 access to the Internet, it is important for us to know when to disconnect and focus on the family.

9. Do strive for a peaceful, loving home

Children in high-conflict families tend to fare worse than children of parents that get along, according to a University of Illinois study review. Creating a loving, supportive environment is a staple of healthy, productive offspring.

If you do have an argument with a spouse, it is recommended to model fair fighting, boundary-setting, and a focus on reconciliation and resolution.

10. Don't be too hard (or too soft)

Diana Baumrind, in her groundbreaking 1966 study, distinguished between authoritarian (very strict), permissive (very lenient), and authoritative (equally disciplined and loving) parents.

WHEN A CHILD
MODELS THEIR AUTHORITA-
TIVE PARENTS,
THEY LEARN
EMOTION REGU-
LATION SKILLS
AND SOCIAL
UNDERSTAND-ING THAT ARE CRITICAL FOR SUCCESS.

In short, authoritarian parents are too hard, permissive parents are too soft, and authoritative are just right.

When a child models their authoritative parents, they learn emotion regulation skills and social understanding that are critical for success.

Being a great leader is all about having a genuine willingness and a true commitment to lead others to achieve a common vision and goals through positive influence. No leader can ever achieve anything great or long-lasting all alone. Teamwork goes hand in hand with leadership. Leadership is about people-and for people.

John C. Maxwell is widely considered to be one of the world's top leadership thinkers. I have compiled 44 of the best quotations from his books to inspire you to be a great leader, too.

1. "A great leader's courage to fulfill his vision comes from passion, not position." John C. Maxwell
2. "Leadership is not about titles, positions or flowcharts. It is about one life influencing another." John C. Maxwell
3. "A leader is one who knows the way, goes the way, and shows the way." John C. Maxwell
4. "Leaders must be close enough to relate to others, but far enough ahead to motivate them." John C. Maxwell

"WHEN THE LEADER LACKS
CONFIDENCE,
THE

5. "A leader who produces other leaders multiplies their influences." John C. Maxwell
6. "A successful person finds the right place for himself. But a successful leader finds the right place for others. John C. Maxwell
7. "Real leadership is being the person others will gladly and confidently follow." John C. Maxwell
8. "When the leader lacks confidence, the followers lack commitment." John C. Maxwell
9. "The leader's Attitude is like a thermostat for the place she works. If her attitude is good, the atmosphere is pleasant, and the environment is easy to work in. But if her attitude is bad, the temperature is insufferable." John C. Maxwell
10. "If you wouldn't follow yourself, why should anyone else?" John C. Maxwell
11. "Great leaders always seem to embody two seemingly disparate qualities. They are both highly visionary and highly practical." John C. Maxwell
12. "The higher you want to climb, the more you need leadership. The greater the impact you want to make, the greater your influence needs to be." John C. Maxwell

And if people won't follow, you are not a leader. That's the Law of Influence." John C. Maxwell

14. "Anyone can steer the ship, but it takes a leader to chart the course. Leaders who are good navigators are capable of taking their people just about anywhere." John C. Maxwell

15. "If you are a leader, the true measure of your success is not getting people to work. It's not getting people to work hard. It is getting people to work hard together. That takes commitment." John C. Maxwell

16. "If you want to be a leader, the good news is that you can do it. Everyone has the potential, but it isn't accomplished overnight. It requires perseverance." John C. Maxwell

17. "If you really want to be an uncommon leader, you're going to have to find a way to get much of your vision seen, implemented, and added to by others." John C. Maxwell

22. “Most good leaders want the perspective of people they trust.” John C. Maxwell

23. “To lead any way other than by example, we send a fuzzy picture of leadership to others. If we work on improving ourselves first and make that our primary mission, then others are more likely to follow.” John C. Maxwell

24. “All true leaders have learned to say no to the good in order to say yes to the best.” John C. Maxwell

25. “The best leaders are humble enough to realize their victories depend upon their people.” John C. Maxwell

26. “Leaders see everything with a leadership bias. Their focus is on mobilizing people and leveraging resources to achieve their goals rather than on using their own individual efforts. 35. “The rewards leaders give are counterbalanced by the results that their people give in return.” John C. Maxwell

36. “The bottom line in leadership isn’t how far we advance ourselves but how far we advance others.” John C. Maxwell

"A LEADER IS GREAT, NOT BECAUSE OF HIS OR HER POWER, BUT BECAUSE OF HIS OR HER ABILITY TO EMPOWER OTHERS."

37. "A leader with confidence is a leader who brings out positive changes in people." John C. Maxwell

41. "A leader is great, not because of his or her power, but because of his or her ability to empower others." John C. Maxwell

43. "Your ultimate goal as a leader should be to work hard enough and strategically enough that you have more than enough to give and share with others." John C. Maxwell

“A LEADER IS GREAT, NOT BECAUSE OF
HIS OR HER POWER, BUT BECAUSE OF
HIS OR HER ABILITY TO EMPOWER OTHERS.” J

44. “As a leader, you don’t earn any points for failing in a noble cause. You don’t get credit for being ‘right’ as you bring the organization to a halt. Your success is measured by your ability to actually take the people where they need to go. But you can do that only if the people first buy into you as a leader. That’s the reality of the Law of Buy-In.” John C. Maxwell

Warren Buffett Says Anyone Can Achieve Success by Following 1 Simple Formula He Uses Every Day

Warren Buffett is arguably the greatest investor of our generation, perhaps even in history. Buffett is also a champion of leadership and personal development, sharing a treasure trove of advice to improve our lives.

One piece of advice is a rule Warren Buffett calls the key to his success – a rule founded on a key principle of finance that he follows religiously. The rule?

Go to bed a little smarter each day.

That's the Buffett formula. As simple as it sounds, it operates on the power of compounding interest. Within a few years, it starts to yield results. "That's how knowledge builds up. Like compound interest," he once succinctly noted.

Practicing the Buffett formula

BUFFET'S INFAMOUS
READING HABIT
IS WHAT HE ATTRIBUTES
FOUNDATIONAL
IMPROVE KNOWLEDGE.

Over the span of your lifetime, the Buffett formula should give you an advantage, as it has Buffett. And the best way to launch it into daily practice is to do what Buffett does every day: Read.

A lot.

Buffet's infamous reading habit is what he attributes as the foundational tool to improve knowledge. He is a voracious reader who spends 80 percent of his own day reading, and he suggests that anyone hoping to achieve similar success should read 500 pages per day.

That also means making the time to read. "I read and think," Buffett once said. "So I do more reading and thinking, and make less impulse decisions than most people in business. I do it because I like this kind of life."

He's not alone.

Bill Gates reads about 50 books per year?. ?Mark Cuban reads more than three hours a day. Elon Musk? ?When asked about how he learned to build rockets, he said, "I read books."

Buffett doesn't limit building up his knowledge to books alone. He reads six newspapers a day, including The Wall Street Journal, Financial Times, The New York Times, USA Today, Omaha World-Herald, and American Banker.

WHETHER OR NOT YOU HAVE TIME FOR SUCH AN AMBITIOUS
GOAL IS LARGELY IRRELEVANT.

Whether or not you have time for such an ambitious goal is largely irrelevant. The point of the Buffett formula is to make whatever progress you can. Few of us can actually squeeze in a 500-page goal with our busy schedules. But most of us, with some intentionality, can fit in 15 pages, maybe 20 pages each day, improving our level of knowledge in the process.

How Do You Define Success?

As 2014 comes to a close and we prepare to turn the page on the calendar, it's inevitable that you'll think about success. Was it a successful year? Do you feel as though you accomplished what you wanted? Where did you fall short? And perhaps most importantly, how can you make 2015 even more successful?

Some of those answers, of course, depend on how you define success. Like many, I grew up equating money and power with success, and for a time, that framed my definition. But as I've matured, that has changed. You see, success is a very personal thing. What drives one entrepreneur may be radically different for another. And understanding how others measure success can help you better understand your own definition.

For me, it's "Success is spending the majority of my time focused on work or tasks that are fulfilling, leveraging my Zone of Genius, maximizing my potential and helping other people in a meaningful way while providing the freedom, lifestyle and experiences that I desire"

“TO FIND AND FULLY LIVE
YOUR PURPOSE
IN LIFE, AND
TO LEAVE AN ENDURING
HAVING MADE A
THE WORLD.”

As we bid farewell to another year, I’ve been pondering these questions too. So I approached a number of “successful” people. Most of them are CEOs or run organizations that they started. (I even included my parents!) By most people’s standards, they are successful. What, then, are their definitions of success? I hope these responses inspire you to think about your own version of success. The one constant I found? We all long for daily joy and fulfillment in our work and beyond.

“To find and fully live your purpose in life, and to leave an enduring legacy of having made a difference in the world.”

– Ron Cordes, founder of the Cordes Foundation

“Success is not having to describe what’s been accomplished.... others do it for you”

– Deborah Hopkins, Chief Innovation Officer of Citibank

“I define success as living my true purpose and having a positive impact on the lives of people by uplifting them and inspiring them to think and act in ways that they may not have considered before.”

– Raj Sisodia, co-founder of Conscious Capitalism and professor at Babson College

– David Kidder, CEO of Bionic

“Success, for me, has always been in providing a great quality of life for my family, for those who work for me, and to my community.”

– Jeremy Young CEO of Tanga

“My definition of success is knowing that what you are doing is helping you and others lead a better, happier, healthier life.”

– Kara Goldin, CEO of Hint Water

“To me, success means creating a business that empowers customers, employees, and community in equal measure. We want to add positive value to people’s lives, from a personal and professional standpoint.”

– Dan Kurzius, co-founder and COO of Mailchimp

“Success is looking back at your life, when you are in your final moments, and possessing a great amount of pride around your creations, accomplishments, and legacy, while possessing little to no regret about what you did not do and missed opportunities (i.e. your family still loves you). If I can die feeling this way, I believe this is success.”

– Seth Besmertnik, CEO of Conductor

"I FEEL THAT
MY LIFE IS

OUTLOOK

"I feel that my life is successful if I can live each day with a positive outlook, have a feeling of contentment with my circumstances, have balance in all the important areas of my life, and have the time and resources to pursue what I am passionate about."

– Marcia Becker, PhD, senior director of Adult Rehabilitative and Rural Services (my mom)

"I define success as having a job that you enjoy and enables you financially, a spouse and family that loves and cares for you, children that make you proud by who they are and what they do, having the freedom to worship a loving God, and being able to contribute to the betterment of your fellow man. I am so blessed!"

DISCIPLINE IS PROBABLY THE ONE TRAIT
MOST ASSO-CIATED WITH ACHIEVEMENT.

BY CHRISTINA DESMARAIS@SALUBRIOUSDISH

16 Daily Habits of Highly Successful People

Discipline is probably the one trait most associated with achievement. It's because accomplishing great things involves consistently doing the right things over and over again, even when it's hard. Take exercise, for example. It's a habit that many highly successful people credit for helping them feel energized, creative, and focused. The difference between mediocre people and those who truly do great things? The latter will run the miles and lift the heavy weights, even when they don't feel like it. Here are the daily habits 17 successful executives credit for helping them get ahead.

1. Manage stress through extreme sports.

"I take time to myself in three ways. The first is through extreme adrenaline sports, either downhill biking or athletic skiing. These require focus and skill in order to be ready for unexpected obstacles, or to control [high] speeds in skiing, and they serve both as healthy distractions and physical training. My second hobby is cardio, whether it be cycling with a street bike or ski mountaineering.

PLAN THE MINUTES OF YOUR DAY.

This is almost like meditating, the body knows what to do and you can replace mind chanting with breathing, relaxation, and pure enjoyment. Lastly, I'm venturing into a new experience with Reiki yoga, in the hopes of becoming a master. I was recently enlightened following a trip to India. Consequently, all of these activities contribute to setting myself up for success with stress management and increased performance."

–Valeriano Antonioli, CEO Lungarno Collection, a hotel management company owned by the Ferragamo family, which recently created the Portrait Brand with award-winning-hotels in Italy

2. Plan the minutes of your day.

"I'm pretty obsessed with my calendar. Every moment of the day is accounted for, to make sure I'm spending my time on the things that are driving progress. I don't want to get sucked into replying to emails or getting distracted. I schedule time not only for meetings but for working on projects or tasks, clearing out emails, thinking, and brainstorming, and planning for the week ahead. Even my workouts, and what things I need to remember for the kids the next day. It's my compass on what I should be doing at any given time."

–Nicole Smith, founder and CEO of Flytographer, a global marketplace for vacation photographers, which has partnered with brands like Fairmont, Expedia, TripAdvisor and Virtuoso

ACTIVELY REMOVE DISTRACTIONS.

3. Start the day with 10 minutes of meditation.

“Every morning I wake up with a cup of coffee, then meditate for 10 minutes in the stillness of my living room. I like starting my day with intention, and meditating helps me center my focus on what I want to accomplish in my business, personal life, health, and relationships. The mind is a very powerful tool, and when you concentrate your energies on a limited set of goals, amazing things begin to happen. Michael Jordan once said, ‘You must expect great things of yourself before you can do them.’ I also remind myself how lucky and thankful I am to be doing what I love with such talented and inspiring people.”

–Jay Roberts, co-founder and CEO of Domio, a hospitality and tech company, which in two years has serviced over 100,000 guests and launched in eight cities

4. Be a reader.

“I’m a heavy reader of mysteries. I started when I was a kid with Agatha Christie, then I moved west with Connelly and others. Now I’ve grown to love historical bios and even today’s political essays.

It’s a great escape for me to jump into a new or unfamiliar environment through novels, or to broaden my perspective and genuine interest in specific historical periods or today’s political context through essays.”

–Jean Charles Perino, co-founder and CCO of La Compagnie, a business-class boutique airline, which has serviced more than 240,000 passengers since launch and in 2018 accounted for 25 percent of business-class travel between New York and Paris

5. Actively remove distractions.

“One of the biggest challenges of today’s world is isolating yourself from all the clutter of life. To remove distraction, I use noise-canceling headphones and do not listen to any music with lyrics. With fewer distractions, I find my concentration increases exponentially, and I’m much more productive.”

–Patrik Vormittag, co-founder and partner at Engrain, provider of interactive mapping technology and data visualization software for buildings, which is used by 2,000 apartment buildings

6. Spend time alone in the morning to set priorities for the day.

“I always find time alone in the morning, whether it’s walking the dog or eating breakfast by myself, to clearly set my priorities, so I know what I need to accomplish each day. I make sure to outline not only my personal priorities, but also priorities for my team, so I can be sure both get done. Once I get into the office, my day becomes about how I can take any obstacles out of the way for my team, so they can execute at the highest level on their priorities. I like to call this working on the business rather than in the business.

SMILE AND TALK TO STRANGERS.

Empowering employees to do their best work has always been the key to my success, as well as being the hallmark of a world-class organization.

–Jim Scott, president and CEO of Receptra Naturals, a family-owned Colorado hemp CBD extract company, which saw revenue increase nearly five times in 2018

7. Read something for pleasure.

“In order to give it my best each day, I take time in the morning to eat a balanced breakfast and read something that’s not work related. This helps me calm my mind. By the time I leave for work, I’m fired up and ready to go.

–Karla Friede, co-founder and CEO of Nvoicepay, a provider of payment automation software for enterprise, which recently announced 105 percent annual growth

8. Make the most of your commute.

“I try to maximize my time by using my commute for planning and thinking. Several days a week I jog or bike to work to give my mind space to decompress and mull over business problems. Research has shown that exercise improves memory and learning, and I’ve found it helps my creativity. Often ideas that come to me during my commute are then the basis for directions the company will take within the next week or month.”

AVOID MEETINGS AND
DON'T ALLOW BRIEFINGS.

–Lisa Shields, founder and CEO of FI.SPAN, a cloud native API orchestration platform working with three of the top 10 U.S. banks, including JPMorgan Chase

9. Never leave any emails unread.

“My inbox has zero or close to zero emails and it has been that way for years. My rules are: First, when I get an email, I will respond to it right away if I think it needs my response, as much as possible. Second, if I have to think about it, I will mostly do it in 24 hours or acknowledge if it is going to take longer. Third, if they do not meet the first or second rule, I will never respond to them. Fourth, for topics I am not interested in, I will put a rule to auto-delete them so as not to waste my time. This helps me be on top of things and stay productive.”

–Anant Kale, founder and CEO of AppZen, which provides AI-based spend auditing of expense reports, invoices, and contracts for Fortune 1000 companies

10. Smile and talk to strangers.

“Growing up in Texas, it was normal behavior to look someone in the eye and smile at them as they walk toward you on the sidewalk. Living in Boston and now San Francisco, it became clear that’s definitely not normal behavior everywhere. I found myself conforming, and then realized that just saying ‘Good morning’ to someone in the elevator or having a short conversation with my

It can be so easy for me to get consumed by my own crazy day-to-day that I can forget to take a step back and take in the big picture, and just getting a quick insight into someone else's world helps me refocus and prioritize what's happening in mine."

—Haley Daiber, investor at Unusual Ventures, a seed-stage venture capital firm, which raised $160 million to close its first fund in 2018

11. Get the ball rolling early.

"Starting my day early with a morning routine centered around productivity helps set the tone for the day. A typical morning for me looks like this: over coffee I'll answer any outstanding emails, network a bit by posting something on LinkedIn, read the news and catch up on current events, check my calendar, and send out any requests or questions that popped into my head overnight. After that I get ready for work, knowing the ball is in motion for the day and I'm set up for success."

—Tom Buiocchi, executive director and CEO of ServiceChannel, a facilities management technology company, which supports brands like Under Armor, Chipotle, Louis Vuitton, CVS Health, and Equinox

12. Avoid meetings and don't allow briefings.

"I limit the number of meetings that I'm involved in and don't allow briefings where the meeting is dominated by presenting recaps, information that is incomplete, or information everyone already knows. Send an update ahead of time so the meeting can be spent debating and challenging, not staring at PowerPoints. The number of hours spent scheduling, preparing for, and sitting through meetings eats into the time that should be spent thinking and engaging in the business."

—Brian Murphy, founder and CEO of ReliaQuest, a cybersecurity provider, which maintains 98 percent and 91 percent customer and employee retention rates, respectively, and saw 451 percent revenue growth from 2014 to 2017

13. Proactively manage decision fatigue.

"Humans can be astonishingly bad at managing and recognizing the impact of decision fatigue (the tendency to make worse choices after prolonged sessions of decision making when they are cognitively exhausted).

To fight this phenomenon, I move my highest priority meetings to midmorning, when I'm most alert, and try to limit the number of decisions I make after lunch. I also try to lock in a number of behaviors as routine, as opposed to making them daily choices, like whether I work out or drive a certain route to work every day.

If you want to devote all your energy to running the country (or your business/ family/ organization), don't spend your limited cognitive resources on variables that don't move the needle."

—Jeremy Kauffman, principal at Scale Venture Partners, a venture capital firm, which invests in early-in-revenue enterprise software companies such as DocuSign, Box, and HubSpot, and raised $400 million to close its sixth fund in 2018

14. Keep up on what's going on outside of yourself and your company.

"My goal is to build external context every day. There are lots of different ways I do this. I spend 30 to 45 minutes catching up on what's happening outside of my own world. When you focus only on what affects your company or industry, you may miss the forest for the trees.

I run through news sources like BBC World News, CNBC, and NPR, focusing on broad trends. In addition, I make sure I have an average of one customer, partner, or competitive touch-point a day, so I have 360-degree context on my business to complement the internal perspective."

—Christine Heckart, CEO of Scalyr, a log management and observability company with customers including NBCUniversal, Giphy, OkCupid, and Zalando

15. Eat dinner as a family every night, with no electronics allowed.

“I ensure that dinner time with my family is a protected and prioritized ritual. We all sit down together each evening and connect face-to-face (electronics are banned from the table). No matter what is going on at work, I commit to dinnertime at home, and am 100 percent present to catch up with my family. Knowing that I have that one hour a day set aside to focus on family allows me to be fully present in my work.”

—Kim Tabac, chief people officer at League, a digital health benefits experience, which serves hundreds of corporate customers across the U.S. and Canada including KPMG, Lush, Unilever, Shopify, Mogo, Intelix Technologies and L’Occitane en Provence

16. Leave your phone on the kitchen counter at night.

“In an ever-connected world, my brain needs a break from the constant presence and buzz of my phone: a new email to attend to, a fire to put out, or an idea to contemplate. To combat it, I never bring my phone into my bedroom when I go to sleep, to ensure I digitally disconnect every day. Life is more than work, and with a family of four, I use the time to connect with my husband, process the day and plan for tomorrow, or unwind with The NYT

Astronaut Christina Koch Just Spent a Record Setting 328 Days in Space--and Revealed a Brutal Truth About Success Few People Are Willing to Admit

Christina Koch, along with astronauts Luca Parmitano and Alexander Skvortsov, parachuted to earth yesterday after 328 days in space, setting a new American duration record for a single space mission by a woman.

(Scott Kelly holds the American record for men with 342 days in space, Peggy Whitson the record for cumulative time with 665 days spread across three missions.)

During the mission Christina, along with Jessica Meir, also took part in the first (and second and third) all-women space walk, one of a total of six she conducted.

“Firsts” are important. “Firsts” are definitely newsworthy.

EFFORTS THAT

FAR LARGER
DIVIDENDS
THAN ANY
"FIRST"
POSSIBLY COULD.

If you've heard of Christina, it's surely due to the first all-female spacewalk. Or because of the spaceflight duration record she just set.

But those accomplishments, while notable, are actually the by-product of a larger, more important mission. (Literally and figuratively.)

Christina studied the behavior of fire in space in an effort to prevent future fires, use fuel more efficiently, and possibly someday reduce pollution levels on Earth.

She conducted experiments on the role of space and gravity on plant health, cellular development, and tissue growth. She researched methods of growing food in space, an important step in preparing for long-duration missions where resupply is impossible.

She even studied how growing plants can affect people on an interpersonal and community level. Social dynamics are important in space and on Earth; the more we improve relationships, the better off we'll all be.

That's just a partial list of her accomplishments. Space, zero gravity, extreme cold: spaceflights provide an outstanding platform for scientific experiments. Christina worked on kidney health. Capillary structures. Agricultural cameras. Bio-fabrication. Microgravity crystals. The list goes on.

WORK, DAY
AFTER DAY...
AND GREAT THINGS ALWAYS HAPPEN.

Efforts that should pay far larger dividends than any “first” possibly could.

But those efforts were only made possible by her ability to manage the physical and mental rigors of such a prolonged stint.

As Steve Jobs once said,

I’m convinced that about half of what separates successful entrepreneurs from the non-successful ones is pure perseverance.

It is so hard. You pour so much of your life into this thing.

There are such rough moments ... that most people give up. I don’t blame them. It’s really tough.

That happens to all of us. We set a huge goal, we set out to achieve it, we hit the ground running... and then, inevitably, hit a rough patch. The tougher the times, the more resolve we need.

That’s why consistently doing what we need to do to succeed, with total focus and resolve, is incredibly difficult.

Which is why the ability to respond positively to failure and adversity – and to keep working hard – is crucial.

After all:

- To succeed, you must delay gratification
- To succeed, you must withstand temptation
- To succeed, you must overcome uncertainty and fear

CHRISTINA DIDN'T FOCUS ON SETTING A RECORD.

- To succeed, you can't just set priorities; you need to follow through and actually do the things that contribute the most to your success

For Christina, setting a space duration record wasn't the goal. Neither was taking part in the first all-female spacewalk.

Both were "just" icing on a much larger cake.

Her goal was to be an outstanding astronaut: to maintain the space station, conduct experiments, be a great teammate, adapt to changing conditions and priorities... to work hard, and stay the course, in service of a larger goal.

In short, Christina embraced the grind.

Christina didn't focus on setting a record.

She focused on the day-to-day – and over time, accomplished what no other American woman ever has.

Which is how success really works.

Keep your head down and focus on doing the work, day after day after day... and great things always happen.

FAILURE ISN'T

65 Quotes That Will Motivate You to Reach Success

There's no such thing as failure, there's only feedback, and it's what we do with that feedback that will ultimately determine how successful we will be.

When we fail we have three options: We can choose to quit, which is the only real failure; we can choose to ignore the feedback and try again, but this is flirting with madness because to do the same thing the same way over and over again expecting different results is a definition of madness; or we can learn from our failure, adapt our approach, and try again.

Every major success is built on a solid bedrock of previous failures. Here are 65 quotes to help inspire you to keep going and make those improvements to your approach that will ultimately lead you to success.
